++ Valid for broadcast between 0600 and 1800

Headline:
Damp start in southeast, most places becoming sunny.

Today:
Low cloud and rain in the east clearing with sunny spells and dry conditions in the west spreading to most parts. Cloud perhaps lingering in the far south. Temperatures average but feeling warm in the November sun in the east.

Tonight:
A clear dry start but cloud soon spilling south across most of the country with some rain later in the night for the northwest. Strengthening winds overnight too.

Tuesday:
Starting dry for many except the Hebrides but rain spreading east, turning heavy for a short time. Brighter but fresher conditions to follow for the afternoon with showers in west.

Outlook for Wednesday to Friday:
Blustery showers on Wednesday, drier in the east and feeling cold. Milder on Thursday and Friday but more cloud and persistent rain at times for the northwest areas. Windy throughout.
